

Bachelor of Arts in International Relations and Diplomacy

Political and economic problems today transcend international boundaries

Principles of Diplomacy and Foreign Policy

Schiller International University's Bachelor Degree in International Relations and Diplomacy offers students an international curriculum that encompasses scientific technological, cultural and humanitarian concerns, as well as the more traditional areas of diplomatic activities. Schiller International University students initially pursue courses in the liberal arts, in order to give them a thorough foundation in history, economics, political science, and international relations. In their final two years of study, students will go on to apply their analytical skills to case studies, debates, and on-site visits. The International Relations and Diplomacy program equips students with the expertise they need to pursue careers in international organizations – fields such as law, government, business, and journalism, as well as moving onward to graduate programs in political science and international relations.

Typical related careers:

-  Foreign Service Officer
-  Government Executive and Legislator
-  News Analyst, Reporter, and Correspondent
-  NGO Representative
-  Corporate Relations Manager

Having lived most of my life in the US, I knew Schiller was the school that would satisfy my dreams of living an international experience, while at the same time allowing me to complete my studies within the framework of an American curriculum. Studying at a school with students and teachers from all over the globe has enriched me as a person by widening my cultural awareness, giving me the gift of friendships that last a lifetime, and prepared me with the tools necessary for today's global work place. My degree in International Relations, has opened the doors for me to work in the aviation and tourism sectors and in my present job as a Cultural Ambassador for bilingual schools in the Community of Madrid.
